BOOKS IN FIRST EDITIONS
SELECTED TO ILLUSTRATE
THE HISTORY OF
ENGLISH PROSE FICTION
FROM 1485 TO 1870

We may go back as far as we please, yet we find the thin ramifications of the novel, and we may say literally that it is as old as the world itself. Like man himself, was not the world rocked in the cradle of its childhood to the accompaniment of stories and tales?

NEW YORK
EXHIBITED BY THE GROLIER CLUB
APRIL 12 TO MAY 5

NOTE

THE aim of this exhibition is to show in first, or early, editions the principal books which illustrate the development of English prose fiction, or reflect the popular taste of the periods to which they belong. Beginning with the first book printed in the English language, and extending to 1870, the year of Charles Dickens's death, the scope of the exhibition has made selection in many cases, particularly in the matter of nineteenth century novelists, extremely difficult, and the Committee anticipates discussion on the subject. A few important writers of the last few years of the period (notably Henry James) have been omitted, because, although their work chanced to begin prior to 1870, they belong distinctly to a later day.

In addition to the members of the Club, who, as usual, have contributed their books, the Committee begs to thank Dr. John Dane, Messrs. Harold Murdock, J. Pierpont Morgan, Charles E. Goodspeed, P. K. Foley and the Library of

INTRODUCTION

THE oldest important romance of the English people is the epic poem Beowulf, evolved from the songs and legends brought by the Saxons to Britain. Its melancholy and rugged simplicity contrast strongly with the gay romances, filled not only with deeds of valor, but with acts of love and courtesy, which were introduced by the Norman conquest.

From the Scandinavian settlers in England came the northern stories of King Horn and Havelock the Dane, which breathed the Viking atmosphere of the tenth century and form a group by themselves in the history of metrical romance. With the gradual assimilation of Norman and English elements arose a consciousness of the greatness of England which brought forth the chroniclers of the twelfth century, who, though writing in Latin, sought to awaken interest in the early history and tongue of the people. Prominent among them, though more of a romancer than a sober chronicler, was the Anglo-

Norman, Geoffrey of Monmouth, who played an important part, with his History of the Kings of Britain, in reviving the Celtic legends of Arthur and the settlement in Britain of Brutus and his Trojans, his work showing alike to Celt, Saxon and Norman a vast wealth of themes for poets and story-tellers. One of the first to build upon this "corner-stone of romance," as Geoffrey's book has been called, was the French poet, Wace, in his Brut, which formed the groundwork, early in the thirteenth century, of the Brut of Layamon, who was the first to celebrate the deeds of Arthur in English verse, and whose work is significant as symbolizing the union which was taking place among the long divided races of the Island. Of the culmination of this reconciliation of races and languages, Chaucer is the personification, although, strangely enough, with all his power as a story-teller in verse, Chaucer had little influence on the early development of prose fiction. The short, pithy tales with which Chaucer was so familiar (the Latin Gesta Romanorum, and later the novelle of the Italians) did, however, exert a great influence, and together with the romances of chivalry were the forerunners of the modern novel.

Layamon's work was followed by numerous poems—translations and imitations of French romances dealing with the "matters" of France, Britain and Rome, as well as with Eastern legends, so that the tales were familiar to the people in English verse long before they made their appearance in the form of prose. In his work on The English Novel, Sir Walter Raleigh says: "When Sir Thomas Malory, Caxton and Lord Berners gave to the Arthur and Charlemagne romances their first English prose dress, it was from late French versions that they worked. The history of English prose fiction begins with those three names, at precisely the point where the researches of folk-lore reach their conclusion. The age of the nameless minstrel is over, that of the responsible prose author has begun."

EARLY PROSE ROMANCES

WILLIAM CAXTON (1422?–1491)

SIR THOMAS MALORY (FL. 1470)

With the invention of printing in the middle of the fifteenth century came an enormous increase in the diffusion of literature, and in England the influence of the art upon the development of romances was especially important. It is of marked significance that the first book printed in the English language—the book, in fact, for the production of which William Caxton learned the art of printing—was an historical romance, Caxton's own translation of Le Fevre's Recueil des Histoires de Troye, printed, however, at Bruges, about 1475.

Upon setting up his press at Westminster, the first English printer continued to show that he was "no less intent upon diverting his customers than upon improving their knowledge and morals," but it was not until 1485 that he undertook the publication of his most notable prose romance, Sir Thomas Malory's Morte Darthur, one of the great books of the world. Nothing is known with certainty of Malory, beyond what is told in the book itself, the conclusion and colophon of which are quoted below. The work is a bringing together of the great body of Arthurian romance, mainly from French sources, with some few adaptations from English poems, and the occasional expression of Malory's own thoughts. In discussing the subject, Mr. Saintsbury writes: "It is what the artist does with his materials, not where he gets them, that is the question; and Malory has done, with his materials, a very great thing indeed." Malory's work was a source of great inspiration to the following age, but with the Elizabethan era its influence dwindled. The nineteenth century saw a great revival of interest, but its results, in the work of Tennyson, Morris, Arnold and Swinburne, were mainly poetical.

In his celebrated preface, after discussing his reasons for undertaking the publication of Le Morte Darthur, and the probability of the hero's actual existence, Caxton wrote that memorable passage which has been said to mark the beginning of English prose fiction: "For herein may be seen noble chivalry, courtesy, humanity, friendliness, hardihood, love, friendship, cowardice, murder, hate, virtue and sin. . . . And for to pass the time this book shall be pleasant to read in; but for to give faith and believe that all is true that is contained herein, be ye at your liberty."

EARLY PROSE ROMANCES

Other romances and tales presented by Caxton to English readers are Godfrey of Boulogne, Reynard the Fox, The History of Jason, Charles the Great, Paris and Vienne, Blanchardine and Eglantine, The Four Sons of Aymon and Eneydos.

Wynkyn de Worde made two reprints of the work, in 1498 and 1529, and editions were issued by William Copland (1557), Thomas East (two, about 1585), and William Stansby (1634). An abridgment appeared in 1684, but the entire work was not reissued until 1816, when Stansby's edition was twice reprinted. In 1817 Robert Southey edited a reprint of Caxton's version, using an imperfect copy in the Althorp collection, the only copy known to exist in addition to the perfect one here exhibited.

WYNKYN DE WORDE (D. 1534?)

ROBERT COPLAND (FL. 1508-1547)

Caxton's successors, especially Wynkyn de Worde, the apprentice who succeeded to Caxton's press, followed in the master's footsteps in their choice of subjects, and published many works of fiction. Among those which issued from Wynkyn de Worde's press were Robert the Devil, Gesta Romanorum, Oliver of Castile, and, probably, Lord Berners's version of Huon of Bordeaux, "the best English prose specimen of the Charlemagne cycle of romances, as Malory's work is the best of the Arthur cycle" (a unique copy of the first edition exists in England). In 1512 he published, for the first time in English, the History of Helyas, Knight of the Swan, one of the most popular of the mediæval legends and analogous to the romance of Lohengrin, which seems to have been founded upon it. The legend usually formed the first part of the story of Godfrey of Boulogne, grandson of the hero, but was omitted by Caxton when he translated and printed the history of Godfrey. Helyas was translated from the French by Robert Copland, at the suggestion of Edward, Duke of Buckingham, "descendant of the Knight of the Swan." The book was illustrated with woodcuts, which added greatly to its interest.

SIR THOMAS MORE (1478-1535)

Based to a certain extent upon Plato's Republic, Sir Thomas More's Utopia, the subject of which is the quest for a model form of government, is an early English example of the kind of fiction which later included Barclay's Argenis (in its political aspect), Bacon's New Atlantis, and Gulliver's Travels, and has been characterized by Professor Cross as "the Coming Race or the Looking Backward of our learned ancestors." It was written in Latin, 1515-1516, and published at Louvain, but was translated into English by Ralph Robinson in 1551. Other English translations were made by Bishop Burnet (1684) and Arthur Cayley (1808). It has also appeared in German, Italian, Dutch and Spanish.

Erasmus arranged for the publication of this edition. Another was issued by Froben at Basle in 1518, and English editions appeared in 1551, 1556, 1597, and several in the next century. A "new edition" of 1808 was edited by Thomas Frognall Dibdin.

THE ELIZABETHANS

WILLIAM PAINTER (1540?-1594) AND THE ITALIAN INFLUENCE

"The history of prose fiction in the time of Elizabeth," writes Sir Walter Raleigh, "is the history of the triumph of the Italian novel, long before introduced into England in the verse of Chaucer, over its natural rival, the romance."

The transition did not take place, however, without bitter opposition, which continued beyond the limits of the century. Good Roger Ascham, who heartily disapproved the Morte Darthur, wrote in his Schoolmaster: "Ten Morte D'Arthures do not the tenth part so much harm as one of these books made in Italie and translated in England," which, said he, were to be found in every shop in London, bringing into England such wickedness "as the single head of an Englishman is not hable to invent." Of the numerous translations from Boccaccio, Bandello and others, which flooded the first half of Elizabeth's reign, the best is William Painter's Palace of Pleasure, a collection of nearly one hundred stories or novelle, derived from the Latin, Greek and French as well as Italian. It furnished a rich storehouse for later story-tellers, and Shakespeare and other dramatists drew largely from it for their plays. In her work on Elizabethan Translations from the Italian, Dr. Mary A. Scott says that she finds forty-three Elizabethan plays whose plots are in The Palace of Pleasure.

SIR GEOFFREY FENTON (1539?-1608)

Fenton's collection of thirteen novels of Banello is derived largely from Boastuau and Belleforest's French translation. It contains several of the tales which appeared in Painter's second volume, published the same year. The book is dedicated to Lady Mary Sidney, mother of Sir Philip Sidney.

WILLIAM ADLINGTON (FL. 1566)

In Adlington's translation of Apuleius's collection of tales, dating from the second century, we find in English form the story of the marriage of Cupid and Psyche, adapted by Apuleius from popular legend, and the most beautiful part of his work. In Apuleius, too, is found an early form of the picaresque escapade.

GEORGE PETTIE (1548–1589)

Of Pettie's Petite Pallace, a collection of twelve classical tales, Edward Dowden has said: "The tales were old, but the manner of telling them was new, and it is this which gives importance to Pettie's work." Anthony à Wood, however, wrote that the book was "more fit to be read by a schoolboy, or rustical amorette than by a gent. of mode or language."

First edition. Quarto. Black letter.

THE ELIZABETHANS

There are several undated editions, all of which differ from the present copy. As this contains the preliminary matter which Sir Sidney Lee says should be in the first edition, we conclude it to be the first. Dated editions appeared in 1598, 1608 and 1613.

GEORGE WHETSTONE (1544?–1587?)

Many of the stories of Whetstone's Heptameron are derived from Giraldi Cinthio's Hecatomithi, notably The Rare Historie of Promos and Cassandra, on which Shakespeare based Measure for Measure. Whetstone had already used the plot for a play which, he stated in the Heptameron, had never been acted, though Shakespeare was probably familiar with it. Of Whetstone's prose version, Walter Pater wrote that it "still figures as a genuine piece, with touches of undesignated poetry, a quaint field flower here and there of diction or sentiment, the whole strung up to an effective brevity, and with the fragrance of that admirable age of literature all about it."

JOHN LYLY (1554?–1606) AND EUPHUISM

It seems to have been the success of the various compilations and translations like Painter's Palace of Pleasure which encouraged John Lyly to produce his Euphues, which has been called the first original prose novel written in England. The story is a tedious one, dealing with the adventures, correspondence and conversations of a youth of Athens "engaged in the pursuit of a strictly moral training." Its style, said to have been modelled on that of Guevara, is characterized by constant and affected straining after epigram and antithesis, on account of which Lyly and his followers are known as "Euphuists," with whom the subject matter is less important than the manner in which it is expressed. Its influence, though enormous for a few years, was of short duration, and it was the subject of much ridicule from Ben Jonson, Wither, Drayton and others, down to Scott, in The Monastery.

- 10 [EUPHUES. THE ANATOMY OF WYT.] [AT END OF COPY SHOWN] IMPRINTED AT LONDON, BY THOMAS EAST, FOR GABRIEL CAWOOD. 1579.

First edition. Quarto. Black letter. Title-page lacking.

The bibliography of this book is very uncertain. It was licensed on December 2, 1578, and that year is assigned (with a question) to an edition in the British Museum. Another edition appeared in 1579 and others in 1580 and 1581. During the present year E. P. Dutton & Co. have issued editions of both Euphues and its continuation (see next number).

A copy of the 1581 edition is exhibited also.

No perfect copy of this first edition of Lyly's continuation of Euphues seems to exist. At least one other edition appeared the same year (1580) and another in 1582. The two parts were issued frequently before 1636.

ROBERT GREENE (1560?–1592)

One of Lyly's foremost "legatees and executors," as his disciples claimed themselves to be, was Robert Greene, who left a larger contribution to the novel literature of his day than any other Elizabethan writer. His non-dramatic works were of four kinds: romantic novels, called by Greene "Love pamphlets," of which Pandosto is a good example; patriotic pamphlets, such as Spanish Masquerado; "conny-catching" writings, describing the tricks of London swindlers; and the Repentances, from which much of Greene's own life and character is learned. Among the last, A Groats-worth of Wit is notable for its abusive passage on Shakespeare, the first allusion to the poet in contemporary literature.

"Greene," writes M. Jusserand, "was one of the most original specimens of the unfortunate men who in the time of Elizabeth attempted to live by their pen. He was as remarkable for his extravagances of conduct as for his talents, sometimes gaining money and fame by the success of his writings, sometimes sinking into abject poverty and consorting with the outcasts of society. Of all the writers of the Elizabethan period he is perhaps the one whose life and character we can

THOMAS LODGE (1558?-1625)

Thomas Lodge, friend and collaborator in play-writing of Robert Greene, was another imitator of Lyly. His best known novel is the pastoral tale Rosalynde, later issued as Euphues Golden Legacie, which furnished the plot of As You Like It. In it the author describes himself as a soldier and sailor offering to his readers "the fruits of his labors that he wrought in the ocean when everie line was wet with a surge, and everie passion countercheckt with by storm." Of the work

THE ELIZABETHANS

Professor Wilbur L. Cross has written: "Rosalind, a pastoral composed in the ornate language of Euphues, is the flower of Elizabethan romance. It satisfies some of the usual terms in the modern definition of the novel. For it is of reasonable length; it possesses a kind of structure, and closes with an elaborate moral."

BARTHOLOMEW YOUNG (FL. 1577-1598) AND THE SPANISH INFLUENCE

To Bartholomew Young the English novel is chiefly indebted for his translation of Montemayor's Diana, through which the Spanish pastoral school was introduced into England. Montemayor's work, printed in Spanish about 1559, is thought to have had a distinct influence upon Sidney, and Shakespeare must have been familiar with it in some form. Young's translation existed in manuscript some sixteen years before it was published. It was undertaken as an exercise to keep up his knowledge of Spanish, after a two years' residence in Spain. Between its translation and publication Young made an important contribution to the large number of English translations from the Italian in his rendering into English of Boccaccio's Amorous Fiammetta. A translation of Diana by Thomas Wilson exists in manuscript in the British Museum.

ANTHONY MUNDAY (1553-1633)

Two series of chivalresque romances which kept their popularity throughout the sixteenth and into the seventeenth century were the Amadis of Gaul and the Palmerin series, both of which were presented in voluminous translations to English readers by Anthony Munday. Emanuel Ford, whose Parismus appeared in 1598, was largely influenced by these translations. The Palmerin series began in Spain with Palmerin d'Oliva, first printed at Salamanca in 1511. Munday's translation, made from the French version, ran into numerous editions.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY (1554-1586) AND THE PASTORAL ROMANCE

Of Sidney's contribution to the English novel in his prose pastoral, Arcadia, Sir Walter Raleigh says: "The story, with its disguisings, digressions, and cross-purposes, would furnish forth plot enough for twenty ordinary novels; but it was the sentiment of the work, rather than its plot, that procured its popularity and influence in the next century. The Arcadia, in fact, is in some sort a halfway house between the older romances of chivalry and the long-winded 'heroic' romances of the seventeenth century. Action and adventure are already giving way to the description of sentiment, or are remaining merely as a frame on which the diverse-coloured flowers of sentiment may be broidered."

While condemning the conceits of the Euphuists, Sidney introduced a style which was almost as artificial, but his Arcadia, a "poem in prose," held its popularity for over one hundred years. It was begun in 1580 for the amusement of his sister, the Countess of Pembroke, famed in Jonson's verse as "Sidney's sister, Pembroke's mother," and was in wide circulation in manuscript copies long before it was printed, in 1590, by William Ponsonby. It is thus the first pastoral romance written in English, although appearing in print the same year as Lodge's Rosalynde.

20a A CONTEMPORARY MANUSCRIPT OF SIDNEY'S ARCADIA.

Sidney entirely rewrote the first two books of the Arcadia, and part of the third, and it was this revised form that was printed in 1590. The manuscript here shown gives the first draft, which has never been printed. The work was not published until four years after Sidney's death, but was circulated among friends of his family in manuscript copies like this one. All the printed editions are from his revised version of the first books.

R. D. (ROBERT DALLYNGTON?)

Francesco Colonna's Hypnerotomachia, descriptive of the love of the author for the beautiful Polia, was first published by Aldus Manutius in 1499, the book being adorned with one hundred and seventy-two notable woodcuts by an unknown artist, the identity of whom has caused much discussion. The first English translation, dedicated to Sir Philip Sidney, and with an "Epistle" signed "R. D.," appeared in 1592. The work is greatly abridged, and the woodcuts are "debased reminiscences of those famous examples in the Aldine edition."

THOMAS NASH (1567-1601) AND PICARESQUE FICTION

Thomas Nash, the direct forerunner of Defoe, is best known as the founder in England of the picaresque romance, of which the earliest example is his Unfortunate Traveller, or, The Life of Jacke Wilton, "describing realistically the shifts and adventures, perils and escapes, of a light-hearted, witty, spring-heeled knave, who goes through all worldly vicissitudes, thus lending himself to his creator's purpose of gaining the opportunity to describe or satirize all classes of society."

This style of fiction began in mediæval times with Reynard the Fox, the immediate forerunner of Nash's book being the Spanish novel Lazarillo de Tormes. Henry Chettle's Piers Plain, 1595, is another novel of the same character as Nash's Unfortunate Traveller.

EMANUEL FORD (FL. 1598–1607)

In Ford's Parismus (1598–1599), extraordinarily popular in its day, is found a survival of the romances of chivalry, with all the artificiality which they later assumed. The author was a follower of Greene, and a Euphuist. He wrote several other romances.

THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY AND HEROIC ROMANCE

TRANSLATIONS OF CERVANTES (1547-1616)

The most important event in the history of fiction during the seventeenth century was the appearance at Madrid, in 1605-1615, of Don Quixote, which, translated into English in 1612-1620, was later to exercise so important an influence on many English novelists, among them Fielding, Sterne, Smollett, Thackeray and Dickens. Begun with the object of ridiculing the romances of chivalry, the work expanded into a brilliant picture of Spanish life, with realistic drawing of character and a new kind of humor, at times approaching tragedy and pathos, which became an important element of modern fiction. It has been said of Don Quixote that "children turn its leaves, young people read it, grown men understand it, old folk praise it."

The popularity, in England, of the first part probably led to the early translation of the author's Persiles and Sigismunda.

JOHN BARCLAY (1582-1621)

"According to one view," writes Edward Bensley, in the Cambridge History of English Literature, "Argenis is simply a political treatise cast in the form of a novel. According to another, it is a perpetual historical allegory; while a third would make it, in all that is essential, a romance. . . . It was among the influences that passed into the heroic novel, and separate signs of it are frequent in the literature of the seventeenth century."

Written in Latin in 1621, it was speedily translated into English, French, Spanish, Italian and Dutch. A translation by Ben Jonson, entered at Stationers' Hall in 1623, was never published.

FRANCIS BACON, VISCOUNT ST. ALBANS (1561-1626)

Allied to More's Utopia and Barclay's Argenis, Bacon's fragment, The New Atlantis, offers a scheme for model facilities for scientific research, and is credited with having suggested the foundation of the Royal Society of England and various similar associations. Although written between 1614 and 1618, it was not published until after Bacon's death, when it appeared in Silva Silvarum.

FRANCIS GODWIN, BISHOP OF HEREFORD

Although written about 1602, Bishop Godwin's Man in the Moone was not published until after his death. It is thought that Bishop Wilkins borrowed from it for his Discovery of a New World in the Moon, published the same year as Godwin's work, and that Cyrano de Bergerac is indebted to it for portions of his Voyage to the Moon (1650), a French translation having appeared in 1648. Although Swift is supposed to have derived some ideas for Gulliver's Travels from De Bergerac, it seems quite possible that he took them directly from Godwin. In his History of Literature in Europe, Hallam wrote: "Godwin himself had no prototype so far as I know except Lucian. He resembles those writers in the natural and veracious tone of his lies . . . He declares positively for the Copernican system, which was uncommon at that time, and he understood surprisingly the principle of gravitation. His book was the only English romance of the first part of the seventeenth century."

Anthony à Wood, in Athenae Oxoniensis, describes Godwin as "a passing great lover of all good literature," and says of his book that, when "it was first heard of, it was considered to be as vain as the opinion of Copernicus or the strange discoveries of the Antipodes."

RICHARD BRATHWAITE (1588?-1673)

Among the numerous works in verse and prose of Richard Brathwaite are a few tales which entitle him to a place in the history of the novel. Besides the work exhibited, The Arcadian Princess, an "allegorical discourse" from the Italian, The Penitent Pilgrim and Panthalia may be mentioned.

Although The Excellent History of Philocles and Doriclea is mentioned on the title-page of Brathwaite's Ar't asleepe Husband?, also published in 1640, the story did not appear in that book, probably for lack of space. A plate representing two lovers kneeling before an altar is sometimes bound in this work, either as a frontispiece, or at p. 246. The same plate sometimes appears bound in Ar't asleepe Husband?

SAMUEL GOTT (B. 1613)

Although we cannot exhibit an early edition of Nova Solyma, a modern translation is shown, as it forms a link in the history of English allegory and should not be overlooked. The translator attributed the authorship to Milton, but the author was recently discovered, through an entry in an old publisher's list, to be Samuel Gott. (See article by S. K. Jones, in The Library, July, 1910.)

ROGER BOYLE, FIRST EARL OF ORRERY
(1621-1679)

In Roger Boyle's long and wearying Parthenissa, with its classic setting and lack of human interest, is found the typical heroic romance, a direct imitation of the French school so popular in England during the latter half of the seventeenth century. These romances reached their full stature in France with the works of Gomberville and de Scudéry, were fostered in the Hôtel de Rambouillet, and translated and imitated by the frequenters of the salons of Mrs. Katherine Philips (the "Matchless Orinda") and the beautiful but pedantic Duchess of Newcastle. They took various forms, historical, Utopian, political and allegorical, other notable English examples being Nathaniel Ingelo's Bentivolio and Urania, 1660, George Mackenzie's Aretina, 1661, and John Crowne's Pandion and Amphigenia, 1665.

First English edition. Folio. Five volumes. Allegorical map.

This work by Madeleine de Scudéry, though published under her brother's name, is shown as an example of the numerous French heroic romances which had great vogue in England in the seventeenth century. It appeared in France, in ten volumes, in 1654-1661. The map, known as the "carte de Tendre," for which the author has been much ridiculed, shows the Lake of Indifference, the Sea of Enmity, and the cities of New Friendship, Tenderness, Forgetfulness, etc.

APHRA BEHN (1640-1689)

Of Mrs. Behn's best known novel, Oroonoko, Sir Walter Raleigh writes: "In this novel Mrs. Behn is one of the early precursors of the romantic revival, and finds her logical place in that movement. But her bold conduct of a simple story and her popularity with her contemporaries entitle her also to claim a share in the attempt, faint and ineffective, that the later seventeenth century witnessed, to bring romance into closer relation with contemporary life." Professor Cross calls Oroonoko "the first humanitarian novel in England," as its purpose was to awaken Christendom to the horrors of slavery. Mrs. Behn is said to have led an adventurous life, but see on this point Mrs. Behn's Biography a Fiction, by Dr. Ernest Bernbaum (1913). She was the first woman writer to live by her pen in England, and wrote popular plays as well as novels. Among the latter are The Fair Jilt, The Nun, Agnes de Castro and The Court of the King of Bantam.

WILLIAM CONGREVE (1670-1729)

DAWN OF THE MODERN NOVEL

JOHN BUNYAN (1628-1688) AND THE ALLEGORY

"To John Bunyan the English novel owes a very great debt. What fiction needed, if it was ever to come near a portrayal of real life, was first of all to rid itself of the extravagances of the romancer and the cynicism of the picaresque storyteller. Though Bunyan was despised by his contemporary men of letters, it surely could be but a little time before the precision of his imagination and the force and charm of his simple and idiomatic English would be felt and then imitated. As no writer preceding him, Bunyan knew the artistic effect of minute detail in giving reasonableness to an impossible story. In The Pilgrim's Progress he so mingled with those imaginative scenes of his own the familiar Scripture imagery and the still more familiar incidents of English village life, that the illusion of reality must have been to the readers for whom he wrote well-nigh perfect. The allegories of Barclay and Scudéri could not be understood without keys; Bunyan's Palace Beautiful needed none." Gross.

DAWN OF THE MODERN NOVEL

Bunyan made another valuable contribution to the development of fiction in The Life and Death of Mr. Badman, with its remarkable description of character.

In 1684 the genuine second part of The Pilgrim's Progress was published, a spurious continuation having appeared in 1683.

JOSEPH ADDISON (1672-1719)

SIR RICHARD STEELE (1672-1729)

"It is no straining of language to speak of The Tatler (1709-1711) and Spectator (1711-1712) of Steele and Addison as brilliant examples of prose fiction. Here, for the first time, are the methods and subjects of the modern novel; all that is wanting is a greater unity and continuity of scheme to make of the Coverley Papers in the Spectator a serial novel of a very high order. Such continuity as there is in the grouping of incidents round the same characters is due to the idea of a Club, consisting of friends of the author, who assist him in editing the paper, and whose humours and adventures he records." Raleigh.

The character sketch, as well as two other forms (the biographical and epistolary) contributing to the novel, had been popular long before it reached a particular development in the Coverley Papers, but its treatment by Steele and Addison was original.

DANIEL DEFOE (1659?-1731)

Robinson Crusoe was published in the sixtieth year of its author, who up to that time had been known chiefly as a voluminous writer of tracts and journalistic contributions. In his recent work on Defoe, Professor William P. Trent writes of Robinson Crusoe: "That it was the most lifelike and interesting story of adventure, indeed the most readable fictitious prose narrative that had been written in English, was at once perceived by the public, as is shown by the number of re-printings speedily necessitated and by the abridgments soon issued. That it was a world story, not a merely national or racial one, was proved by the fact" that the first part was in 1720 translated into Dutch, French and German, and that soon all three parts were read in those tongues. Within twenty-five years, there were Italian and Danish versions, and "since that time the book, in whole or in part, has been translated, not only into the chief European languages, but into Latin and ancient Greek and Hebrew, as well as into Arabic, Persian and other tongues. Adaptations, abridgments and imitations have been very numerous; artists and publishers have vied with one another in producing beautiful editions; children of all ages and countries have been brought up on the wonderful story. . . . [Defoe] is the real father of the English novel in the sense that he was the first Englishman to write a truly readable, widely circulated, and permanently valuable prose story dealing with secular human life."

Defoe's other important contributions to fiction, all produced between his sixtieth and sixty-fifth year, and dealing for the most part with adventure or picaresque romance, are Memoirs of a Cavalier, Captain Singleton, Moll Flanders, The History . . . of the Truly Honorable Colonel Jacque, The Fortunate Mistress (known as Roxana), and A New Voyage round the World.

JONATHAN SWIFT (1667-1745)

Gulliver's Travels, described by Edmund Gosse as "that sinister and incomparable masterpiece in which misanthropy reaches the pitch of a cardinal virtue," appeared anonymously in 1726, and whatever Swift's indebtedness to Lucian, Cyrano de Bergerac, Francis Godwin, Defoe, and others may have been, it is certain that his work was an immediate success. "The whole impression sold in a week," wrote Gay; "from the highest to the lowest it is universally read, from the cabinet council to the nursery"; and Lady Mary Montagu says: "Here is a book come out that all our people of taste run mad about," while Arbuthnot prophesied for the work "as great a run as John Bunyan."

"The strength of Swift's work as a contribution to the art of fiction lies in the portentous gravity and absolute mathematical consistency wherewith he develops the consequences of his modest assumptions . . . But the design of the book forbids its classification among works of pure fiction; it is enough to remark that in Gulliver realism achieves one of the greatest of its triumphs before its ultimate conquest of the novel." Raleigh.

The book was published on October 28, 1726, and before the end of the year several other editions had appeared. It was translated into both French and Dutch the following year.

ROBERT PALTOCK (1697-1767)

The fame of Robert Paltock, of whose life little is known, rests on one original romance, Peter Wilkins, which is modeled on Defoe and Swift, and which tells of a world of flying men and women. The book was a favorite with Coleridge, Southey, Scott, Charles Lamb and Leigh

Hunt. In these days of "flying men," it is interesting to give credence to the suggestion that Paltock named his hero after John Wilkins, Bishop of Chester, author of The Discovery of a World in the Moone, who in his Mathematical Magick had seriously questioned whether men could acquire the art of flying.

First edition. Duodecimo. Two volumes. Six plates by Boitard. Plates by Stothard, from the 1816 edition, bound in.

Some copies are said to be dated 1750. A Dublin edition appeared directly after the London one, others in 1783 and 1784, and several in the next century. A reprint of the original edition was published in 1884, with a preface by A. H. Bullen. It was translated into French in 1763, and into German in 1767.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY REALISTS

SAMUEL RICHARDSON (1689-1761)

The four great novelists of the eighteenth century—Richardson, Fielding, Smollett and Sterne—have been characterized by Professor Saintsbury as the “Four wheels of the novel wain.”

Early in the century interest in the theater declined, though the reading of the older dramatists remained a favorite pursuit. It fell to Samuel Richardson, a prim and conscientious bookseller, from his youth an inveterate story-teller, to discover that a story without the framework necessary for the drama was easier to read than a play, and to give to the world, in Pamela, “the first notable English novel of sentimental analysis,” heralding “the advent of everyday manners and common people to artistic acceptance.” The book, which, like its successors, Clarissa and Sir Charles Grandison, is characterized by high moral purpose and minuteness of observation, met with immediate and unparalleled success. It was fashionable for great ladies to carry it about in their pockets, it was recommended from the pulpit, and by one writer was placed next to the Bible. Of Clarissa, the author's masterpiece, Dr. Johnson said that it was "the first book in the world for the knowledge it displayed of the human heart."

Richardson's three voluminous novels are written for the most part in the form of letters. They were widely translated, and had countless imitators in France and Germany, while the effect of his work on Rousseau and French emotionalism was very great.

HENRY FIELDING (1707-1754)

"With the publication of Clarissa Harlowe and Tom Jones the novel has found its art and fit subject matter. . . . The novel as Richardson left it was a sober dissection of the heart. With Fielding it was perhaps a no less serious effort, though its purpose was clouded by extravagant wit and humour. Richardson was reaching the inner life through sentimentalism; Fielding, through our vices and follies." Cross.

Fielding began his first novel, Joseph Andrews, "written in imitation of the manner of Cervantes," as a parody of Richardson's Pamela, but soon forgot his purpose in an entirely new style of writing, which he felt obliged to defend when he came to write the preface of the book. It was followed by Jonathan Wild (1743), Tom Jones (1749), and Amelia (1751). Of Tom Jones, on account of which the title of "Father of the English Novel" has been claimed for its author, Sir Walter Raleigh writes: "Common life is the material of the story, but it is handled here for the first time with the freedom and imagination of a great artist." Its sale was enormous, and Millar, the publisher, gave Fielding one hundred pounds more than the amount agreed upon, on account of its success.

TOBIAS GEORGE SMOLLETT (1721-1771)

To Smollett, whose work is characterized by broad comedy and exaggerated caricature, together with a revival of the picaresque, the English novel owes, among other types, the British sailor, found in the author's Adventures of Roderick Random, the first realistic novel of the sea. Between Roderick Random, which is written in imitation of Gil Blas, and his last and best novel, The Expedition of Humphry Clinker, called by Thackeray "the most laughable story that has ever been written since the goodly art of novel-writing began," Smollett published The Adventures of Peregrine Pickle (1751), The Adventures of Ferdinand, Count Fathom (1753), and The Adventures of Sir Launcelot Greaves (1762), the last a direct imitation of Don Quixote.

LAURENCE STERNE (1713-1768)

"He is not a fifth wheel to the coach by any means: he is the fourth and almost the necessary one. . . . Certainly never was there a style which more fully justified the definition given by Buffon, in Sterne's own time, of style as the very man. Falsetto, 'faking', vamping, shoddy—all manner of terms may be heaped upon it. . . . Only, once more, if it did not exist we should be ignorant of more than one of the most remarkable possibilities of the English language.

Thus, in almost exactly the course of a technical generation—from the appearance of Pamela in 1740 to that of Humphry Clinker in 1771—the wain of the novel was solidly built, furnished with four main wheels to move it, and set a-going to travel through the centuries." Saintsbury.

Though it has been stated that the first two volumes appeared in York in 1759, no volumes with that date have been discovered. The second edition of Vol. I appeared in 1760, with a plate by Ravenet, after Hogarth; Vol. III of the first edition, with the Hogarth frontispiece, was issued in 1761, and is the first to bear an imprint on the title-page (London, Dodsley). Volumes V-IX, 1762-1767, were issued by Becket and Dehondt.

SARAH FIELDING (1710-1768)

Notwithstanding the fact that the title-page of Miss Fielding's first novel, David Simple, an "exaltation of friendship," stated the work to be "by a lady," it was attributed to Henry Fielding, who denied its authorship in the preface which he wrote for the second edition.

With something of her brother's humor, but with little knowledge of the world to give reality to her presentation of picaresque romance, Miss Fielding was rather a follower of Richardson, who, delighted with the implied flattery, paid her high compliments upon her knowledge of the human heart.

ELIZA HAYWOOD (1693?–1756)

Mrs. Haywood, author in 1725 of Memoirs of a Certain Island adjacent to Utopia, is often classed with Mrs. Manley as an imitator of Mrs. Aphra Behn. Her best novels, however, written twenty-five years after her early ones, "when the art of the novelist had been new-created by Richardson, Fielding and Smollett," are The History of Miss Betsy Thoughtless and The History of Jemmy and Jenny Jessamy.

examples of that type of satirical novel in which abuse is hurled at real persons through the medium of animals or inanimate objects. The characters of Pompey were intended to portray well known ladies of the time.

CHARLES JOHNSTONE (1719?–1800?)

Johnstone's Chrysal, or the Adventures of a Guinea, is one of the cleverest as well as the fiercest and most scurrilous of the novels of the type of Pompey the Little. It shows the influence of Smollett.

CHARLOTTE LENNOX (1720-1804)

Mrs. Charlotte Lennox's Female Quixote is a belated satire on the sentimentalism of the heroic romance. Her novels and plays were extravagantly admired by Dr. Johnson, who, at a supper given in her honor at his Club, presented her with bay-leaves decking a huge apple pie, and crowned her head with laurel.

FRANCES SHERIDAN (1724-1766)

The Memoirs of Miss Sidney Bidulph, by the mother of Richard Brinsley Sheridan, is a melancholy novel of some power, written in the manner of Richardson, to whom it is dedicated. Dr. Johnson's comment upon it, addressed to the author, was: "I know not, madam, whether you have a right, upon moral principles, to make your readers suffer so much."

SAMUEL JOHNSON (1709-1784)

Appearing at a time when the great lexicographer was at the height of his intellectual power, although written in the evenings of one week (it has been said, to pay the funeral expenses of his mother), Rasselas at once contains some of Johnson's best writing, and is his one contribution to the realm of the novel. The question has been raised as to whether the gloomy and powerful work may be regarded as a novel at all, but its importance in this connection lies in the fact that the hold of fiction upon the popular mind had become so great, that, when he wished to teach a moral lesson, Johnson chose the novel as his medium of expression.

The words "The History of Rasselas," by which title the book is better known, did not appear upon the title-page until after Johnson's death.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH (1728-1774)

"Whether the book [Vicar of Wakefield] is still much read it would be hard to say; for when a work has, so to speak, entered into the blood of a literature, it is often more recollected and transmitted by oral tradition than actually studied. But in spite of the inconsistencies of the plot, and the incoherencies of the story, it remains, and will continue to be, one of the first of our English classics. Its sweet humanity, its simplicity, its wisdom and its common-sense, its happy mingling of character and Christianity, will keep it sweet long after more ambitious and, in many respects, abler works have found their level with the great democracy of the forgotten." Life of Oliver Goldsmith, by Austin Dobson.

THE NOVEL OF PURPOSE

HENRY BROOKE (1703?-1783)

The impulse to teach or arouse through fiction may be felt, in English literature, as early as More's Utopia. In France it was strongly manifested in the works of the Encyclopædists, Rousseau and Condorcet, who were followed and imitated during the latter part of the eighteenth century by an English school of writers, which may be divided broadly into two classes, the pedagogic and the revolutionary. The former class began with Henry Brooke's Fool of Quality, which, though poorly constructed, contains noble thoughts on the training of a Christian gentleman.

THOMAS DAY (1748-1789)

The pedagogic novel was interestingly developed by Thomas Day in Sandford and Merton, a work intended for the education of parents in the training of children as well as for the amusement and instruction of the children themselves. Day was one of the first to cry out against the fashionable delicacy of the heroine of fiction, and to demand for her a more robust life and education.

Robert Bage exemplifies the Revolutionary School of novelists (for the most part of minor importance), who, influenced by the principles of the French Revolutionists, echoed the thought and radical opinions of the times. Scott reprinted three of Bage's novels in the Novelists' Library.

In addition to Bage and the Godwins, examples of whose works are exhibited, Thomas Holcroft, Mrs. Elizabeth Inchbald, Mrs. Amelia Opie and Mrs. Charlotte Smith may be mentioned as typifying this school.

In Mary, based on wrongs sustained by her sister, we find Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin expressing the same theories which she put forth in her Vindication of the Rights of Women. It is, in a way, our first feminist novel, having a direct bearing upon questions which have become prominent in modern fiction.

WILLIAM GODWIN (1756-1836)

Perhaps the best novels of the Revolutionary School are William Godwin's Caleb Williams and St. Leon, which are Gothic romances as well, the former being our first detective story, and the latter dealing with Rosicrucian mysteries. That they have interest is evidenced by the fact that when Waverley appeared anonymously it was attributed to Godwin by his admirers.

THE REVIVAL OF ROMANCE

HORACE WALPOLE (1717-1797) AND GOTHIC ROMANCE

In The Castle of Otranto, the novel with which the eccentric master of Strawberry Hill founded a new school of romance, an attempt was made to blend the extravagance of the early romances with the realism of the eighteenth century novels. Contemporary characters and conversation are introduced in a Gothic setting, and a free rein is given to the imagination, especially in the introduction of the supernatural and the element of unreasoning terror. The popularity of this so-called Gothic school of romance continued well into the nineteenth century, when further German elements were added to it. Its influence is evidenced in America in much of the work of Irving, Poe and Hawthorne.

CLARA REEVE (1729-1807)

Shocked by what she considered Walpole's failure to achieve his end in The Castle of Otranto, Miss Reeve attempted in The Champion of Virtue to write a Gothic story, 'at the same time keeping within "the utmost verge of probability."' "The novel," she declared in her celebrated definition, "is a picture of real life and manners, and of the times in which it is written. The romance, in lofty and elevated language, describes what never happened, nor what is likely to happen."

WILLIAM BECKFORD (1759-1844) AND ORIENTAL ROMANCE

In 1704-1717 new interest in Eastern wonders and superstitions had been awakened by Antoine Galland's French translation of The Arabian Nights, and humorous and satirical adaptations were attempted by Anthony Hamilton and Voltaire. They were imitated by the extravagant collector, William Beckford, whose mansion, named Font-hill Abbey, was built with mysterious windings and furnished with oriental splendor. He wrote Vathek, his Arabian Tale, in French, but prior to its publication in Lausanne and Paris in 1787 it was translated from the manuscript into English by Samuel Henly, and issued in London without the author's consent.

THE REVIVAL OF ROMANCE

RUDOLF ERIC RASPE (1737-1794)

Raspe's name was not associated during his lifetime with the work by which he is chiefly remembered, and for which he seems to have drawn on two sources, namely, the personal reminiscences of Baron Hieronymus von Munchausen, an eccentric old German soldier, and his own commonplace-book, which he had stored with absurd exaggerations and farcically mendacious tales of adventures gathered from his varied reading. Originally a book of forty-nine pages, Baron Munchausen's Narrative of his Marvellous Travels was later enlarged by fifteen chapters by a clerk in the employ of Kearsley, the bookseller, who had bought the manuscript and wished to increase its popularity, which soon became worldwide. It is said to have been translated into more languages than any English book, with the exception of The Pilgrim's Progress, Robinson Crusoe and Gulliver's Travels. Of it Mr. Thomas Seccombe has written: "The book's permanent literary interest attaches exclusively to Raspe's original chapters, the spontaneity and dry humour of which can hardly be surpassed. Raspe worked in the spirit of Lucian and Rabelais."

"It has been said in the Dictionary of National Biography that the first edition was published in London at the end of 1785 [no copy is known], but we are informed that this is an error and that the above edition, published in Oxford, December, 1785, and predated 1786, is really the first: we have so considered it. The first German edition, translated by the poet Burger, appeared in 1787." Henrietta C. Bartlett.

Four other editions appeared in 1786, and a seventh, with a supplementary chapter, in 1793.

ANN RADCLIFFE (1764-1823)

The Romantic School reached its highest development before Scott in the works of Mrs. Radcliffe, who, between 1789 and 1797, published five Gothic romances—The Castles of Athlin and Dunbayne, A Sicilian Romance, The Romance of the Forest, The Mysteries of Udolpho and The Italian. The last two novels were her best. Both were speedily translated into French and the latter was dramatized as The Italian Monk. Mrs. Radcliffe's ability to suggest without actually using the terror of the supernatural, and her power of description, both of scenery and events, give her a distinctive place in the history of fiction, whether or not she possessed the positive genius attributed to her by Scott.

MATTHEW GREGORY LEWIS (1775-1818)

Inspired by the perusal of The Mysteries of Udolpho, Lewis's Ambrosio, or The Monk was written in ten weeks at The Hague, when the author was twenty years old. He had been deeply impressed and influenced by The Sorrows of Werther, having met Goethe at Weimar. His work is filled with necromancy and magic, and is boyish and vulgar, but was admired by a generation who demanded the terror style in fiction.

REGINA MARIA ROCHE (1764?–1845)

Miss Roche won immense popularity through the publication of the sentimental Children of the Abbey, which almost rivaled Mrs. Radcliffe's Mysteries of Udolpho in popular affection. She produced several other novels of a similar nature, which were eagerly read in their day, but which seem to the modern reader vapid and absurd.

MARY WOLLSTONECRAFT SHELLEY

Although of a later date than the Gothic novels already described, Mrs. Shelley's Frankenstein is included in this division, as it is not only conceded to be the best written novel that this school produced, but is also one of the most horrible. Shelley's own contributions to the novel, Sastrozzi and St. Irvyne, also adopted the terror style, but have been characterized as two of the feeblest books ever written by a man of the greatest genius.

JANE PORTER (1776-1850) AND HISTORICAL ROMANCE

Side by side with the Gothic romance, and closely allied to it, flourished the historical romance, which was revived by the appearance, in 1762, of Longsword, a tale of chivalry attributed to the Rev. Thomas Leland of Dublin. Not until 1783, however, did Sophia Lee begin the publication of her Recess, which marks the beginning of a line of historical novels that continued until they reached their perfection in Scott. Miss Porter's Thaddeus of Warsaw and Scottish Chiefs are some of the few prior to Waverley which have survived, although there seems to be no truth in her claim that Scott imitated her, whereas he did acknowledge his debt to Mrs. Radcliffe, and to the antiquary Joseph Strutt, whose Queenhoo-Hall, left unfinished by the author, he completed hastily in 1808.

THE NOVEL OF DOMESTIC SATIRE

FRANCES BURNEY, MADAME D'ARBLAY

"She had very little inventive power; her best novel, Evelina, has no plot worth speaking of. She never wrote really well. . . . What, then, was it in Evelina, and in part in Cecilia (with a faint survival even into Camilla), which turned the heads of such a town as Johnson and Burke, Walpole and Windham, and many others—which, to persons who can see it, makes the books attractive to-day, and which should always give their author a secure and distinguished place in the great torch-race of English fiction-writers? It is this—that Miss Burney had a quite marvellous faculty of taking impressions of actual speech, manners, and to a certain extent character: that she had, at any rate for a time, a corresponding faculty of expressing, or at least reporting, her impressions. Next (and perhaps most of all), that she had the luck to come at a moment when speech and manners were turning to the modern; and lastly, that she was content . . . to let her faculty of expression work, au-

"[Dr. Johnson] got it almost by heart, and mimicked the characters with roars of laughter. Sir Joshua Reynolds took it up at table, was so absorbed in it that he had to be fed whilst reading, and both he and Burke sat up over it all night. No story since Clarissa Harlowe had succeeded so brilliantly. Miss Burney expressed her delight on hearing some of this news by rushing into the garden and dancing round a mulberry tree—a performance which in her old age she recounted to Sir W. Scott." Leslie Stephen.

MARIA EDGEWORTH (1767–1849)

Early falling under the influence of Thomas Day, Miss Edgeworth produced her Parent's Assistant, in six volumes, and the Moral Tales, illustrating her father's principles of education; but her fame rests on her development of the society novel, Belinda being the best of this group of her works, and on her creation, as the author of Castle Rackrent, of what may be called the novel of nationality. Scott acknowledged that it was the success of this book which caused him to endeavor to do for Scotland what Miss Edgeworth had accomplished for Ireland. Her work, while all more or less didactic, shows a remarkable combination of education, sense, taste, humor and pathos.

THE NOVEL OF DOMESTIC SATIRE

JANE AUSTEN (1775-1817)

The six novels which made Jane Austen famous were written in two groups—the first consisting of Pride and Prejudice, Sense and Sensibility and Northanger Abbey, chiefly between 1796 and 1798; the second, Mansfield Park, Emma and Persuasion, from 1811 to 1816. The order of publication, however, is as follows: Sense and Sensibility, 1811 (nearly fourteen years after it was written); Pride and Prejudice, 1813; Mansfield Park, 1814; Emma, 1816; and the others, the year after Miss Austen's death. Her life was spent quietly in the south of England, where most of her scenes, depicted with amazing clarity and realism, are laid, and only a late and partial appreciation was won during her lifetime by the work which she herself likened to miniature painting, "on which I work with so fine a brush as produces little effect after much labor."

"That young lady," said Scott, "had a talent for describing the involvements, feelings and characters of ordinary life, which is to me the most wonderful I have ever met with. The big bow-wow I can do myself like any one going; but the exquisite touch, which renders commonplace things and characters interesting from the truth of the description and the sentiment, is denied

SIR WALTER SCOTT (1771-1832) AND THE CULMINATION OF THE HISTORICAL NOVEL

The novels and tales produced by Sir Walter Scott, "the first of the modern race of giants in fiction," between the anonymous appearance of Waverley in 1814 and the completion, the year before his death, of the last of the Waverley Novels, Count Robert of Paris and Castle Dangerous, number more than thirty.

Dr. T. F. Henderson, in the Cambridge History of English Literature, speaks as follows of the influence which Scott exerted over the novel: "In fiction he may almost be reckoned the founder of the historical romance, in which he has had many successors, both in this country and abroad; and, if Smollett was his predecessor in the Scottish novel, . . . Scott may be deemed the originator of a pretty voluminous Scottish romantic school, of which the most distinguished representative is R. L. Stevenson; while, with Smollett and Galt, he was the forerunner of a vernacular school of fiction which, within late years, developed into a variety to which the term kailyard has, with more or less appositeness, been applied. On the Continent, Scott shared with Byron a vogue denied to all other English writers except Shakespeare, and his influence was closely interwoven with the romantic movement there, and, more especially, with its progress in France."

It was Scott's culminating success in a book-selling sense, and marked the highest point both of his literary and social prosperity." It was issued with better presswork and on finer paper than his earlier works, with the price raised from eight to twelve shillings, but 12,000 copies were sold.*

CHARLES ROBERT MATURIN (1782-1824) AND THE RENOVATION OF GOTHIC ROMANCE

The hold which the Gothic romance had on popular imagination is evidenced by its continuation, with more artistic development, up to the middle of the nineteenth century. The first of its nineteenth century "renovators" (so called by Professor Cross) was Charles Robert Maturin, who wrote in the preface of his first romance, The Fatal Revenge, or The Family of Monturio, 1807: "I have presumed to found the interest of a romance on the passion of supernatural fear, and on that almost alone." His strength lies largely in his power of suggestion, felt especially in his best book, Melmoth the Wanderer, which introduces the Rosicrucian idea, very popular among his fellow-writers. The influence of his work was so much felt in France that Balzac undertook a continuation of it.

SUSAN EDMONSTONE FERRIER (1782-1854)

Miss Ferrier, for twenty years a friend of Scott, had keen humor and marked ability in sketching character. The one important caricature that she created, the woman who is always quoting the opinions of an absent friend, is found in The Inheritance. Her other novels are Marriage and Destiny.

The book may be said to have laid the foundation of a branch of literature hitherto untried. The sketches resemble Dutch paintings in their fidelity to detail and in the brightness and

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, FIRST EARL OF BEACONSFIELD (1804-1881)

"A quite unique place in the history of English fiction will be universally allowed to be held by Benjamin Disraeli, once called the younger . . . and afterwards the wonder of the world under his title the Earl of Beaconsfield. . . . Yet, with all their combined effectiveness and particular brilliancy, his literary gifts were limited in their range; notwithstanding his extraordinary power of writing dialogue, he had no essentially dramatic gifts." Sir Adolphus Ward, in The Cambridge History of English Literature.

In 1826, at the age of twenty-two, he took the world of London by storm with the dazzling apothegms and political satire of Vivian Grey, and, though writing novels was with him but a side issue, he continued to produce them until the year before his death,—the last, Endymion, appearing in 1880. Contarini Fleming (1832), Henrietta Temple (1837), Coningsby (1844), and Sybil (1845) are generally pronounced to be his best works.

EDWARD GEORGE BULWER-LYTTON, FIRST BARON LYTTON (1803–1873)

"He began novel-writing very early (Falkland is of 1827)," writes Professor Saintsbury; "he continued it all his life, and he was the very Proteus-chameleon of the novel in changing his styles to suit the tastes of the day. He never exactly copied anybody: and in all his various attempts he went extremely near to the construction of masterpieces."

Among Bulwer's twenty-nine novels we find examples of the society novel (Pelham, 1828), the Gothic romance (Zanoni, 1842), the novel of crime (Eugene Aram, 1832), and five noteworthy historical novels (Devereux, 1829; The Last Days of Pompeii, 1834; Rienzi, 1835; The Last of the Barons, 1843; and Harold, 1848); while in the domestic tales of The Caxtons and My Novel, we find him following the popular trend toward realism.

WILLIAM HARRISON AINSWORTH (1805-1882)

Ainsworth, like George Payne Rainsford James of "two horsemen" fame, was a professed imitator of Scott. Beginning in 1834 with Rookwood, which celebrates the deeds of the famous highwayman, Dick Turpin, his popularity endured for fully twenty years. He continued to write until 1881, producing in all some forty novels, for the most part dealing with historical crimes and cruelties, treated in a picturesque but flippant manner.

Ainsworth chose the illustrators of his works with great care; among them are George Cruikshank, Hablot K. Browne and Sir John Gilbert.

CHARLES DICKENS (1812-1870), HUMORIST
AND HUMANITARIAN

"The humanitarian novel, with which the name of Dickens is preëminently associated after the publication of Pickwick, is the popular section of an extensive humanitarian literature, and as such it is the most available record of a deep and far-reaching philanthropic movement which had its beginnings in the eighteenth century, and rose to its sentimental culmination some fifty years ago." Cross.

"Scott died in 1832; and within four years Englishmen were reading Pickwick Papers, the inspired writing of a new novelist, who had two great qualities absent in Sir Walter—humour and humanitarianism. . . . In the history of British fiction, Dickens fills the biggest place, contributed the largest number of permanently interesting characters, owed less to other authors than any other novelist; . . . and while it is possible to contemplate the history of the novel minus any other author, we simply cannot get along without Dickens. The extraordinary succession of masterpieces that he produced with hardly any lapses for thirty years put the whole world hopelessly in his debt." Phelps.

"Thankfully I take my share of love and kindness which this generous and gentle and charitable soul has contributed to the world. I take and enjoy my share, and say a benediction for the meal." Thackeray.

CHARLES JAMES LEVER (1806-1872)

Of Charles Lever, Anthony Trollope wrote: "Of all the men I have ever encountered, he was the surest fund of drollery. . . . Rouse him in the middle of the night, and wit would come from him before he was half awake." The rollicking style of fiction which culminated in Lever originated in William H. Maxwell, who was also a weaker predecessor in the "romance of war" (usually dealing with the Napoleonic campaigns), so popular in the second quarter of the nineteenth century. Beginning with The Confessions of Harry Lorrequer (1839), Lever produced over thirty novels. As a portrayer of Irish character he is said to have been greatly over-rated.

SAMUEL WARREN (1807-1877)

In Samuel Warren's one successful novel, Ten Thousand a Year, dealing with the validity of certain title-deeds, there are suggestions of both Bulwer and Dickens. It first appeared in Blackwood's Magazine, beginning in 1839, and the cleverness of its legal portraits, though declared to be caricatures, made it at once immensely popular. In the preface the author wrote: "Whatever may be its defects in execution, it has been written in a grave and earnest spirit, with no attempt whatever to render it acceptable to mere novel-readers. Literature is not the author's profession."

ROBERT SMITH SURTEES (1803-1864) AND THE SPORTING NOVEL

Surtees's papers dealing with the adventures of "Mr. Jorrocks," a sporting grocer, contributed to the New Sporting Magazine, were collected as Jorrocks's Jaunts in 1838, and perhaps suggested to Chapman and Seymour the original idea of Pickwick Papers. The book's success led Lockhart to suggest that Surtees try his hand at a novel, the result being Handley Cross, or the Spa Hunt. It was expanded in 1854 into Handley Cross, or Mr. Jorrocks's Hunt, and is one of the best of a class of fiction exceedingly popular in the middle of the nineteenth century. Surtees's sporting novels were preceded by Pierce Egan's Life in London (1821), which, though scarcely belonging to the field of the novel, was widely read by all classes of society.

CHARLOTTE BRONTË (1816–1855)
EMILY JANE BRONTË (1818–1848)
ANNE BRONTË (1820–1849)

Under the pseudonyms of Currer, Ellis and Acton Bell, from their quiet home in Haworth where the greater part of their short lives was passed, the Brontë sisters simultaneously offered their three novels, The Professor, Wuthering Heights and Agnes Grey, to various publishers. The attempts of Emily and Anne were successful, but The Professor was refused, whereupon Charlotte immediately began Jane Eyre, introducing a new type of heroine. The book was accepted, and published in August, 1847, four months before Wuthering Heights and Agnes Grey, which appeared together in December.

The scene of Charlotte Brontë's Shirley, like that of Jane Eyre, is laid in Yorkshire; those of Villette and its early sketch, The Professor, in Brussels.

FROM WAVERLEY TO 1870

Of her masterpiece, Francis Hovey Stoddard writes: "The dominance of the external in the novel of personal life was ended when Jane Eyre was written. The one thing lacking in Pride and Prejudice is intensity of interest. The one thing thrilling through Jane Eyre and Villette is intensity of interest—interest in one's own soul-life, interest in emotion as emotion. When Jane Eyre is finished passion has entered into the novel."

Of Emily's one novel, Professor Cross has written: "Beyond the madness and terror of Wuthering Heights, romantic fiction has never gone. Its spiritual counterpart in real life is Emily Brontë, who preserved her inexorable will far into the day on which she died."

WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY (1811-1863) AND THE RETURN TO REALISM

"After that book [Vanity Fair] there could be no doubt about the greatness of its writer, though it may be doubted whether even now the quality of his greatness is correctly and generally recognized. It is this—that at last the novel of real life on the great scale has been discovered. . . . He had struck his path and he kept to it: even when as in Esmond (1852) and The Virginians (1858-1859) actually, and in Denis Duval prospectively, he blended the historical with the domestic variety. Pendennis (1849-1850) imports nothing out of the most ordinary experience; The Newcomes (1854-1855), very little; Philip (1861-1862), only its pantomime conclusion; while the two completely historical tales are in nothing more remarkable than in the way in which their remoter and more unfamiliar main subject, and their occasional excursions from every-day life, are subdued to the scheme of the realist novel in the best sense of the term—the novel rebuilt and refashioned on the lines of Fielding, but with modern manners, relying on variety and life, and relying on these only.” Saintsbury.

AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL NOVEL

"It was Borrow who first gave gypsies a citizenship in literature. . . . On the whole, it seems best to regard him as one of the most remarkable of autobiographers. 'What is autobiography?' he asked. 'Is it a mere record of the incidents of a man's life, or is it a picture of the man himself—his character, his soul?' If, as seems reasonable, we take this to be applicable to Lavengro and The Romany Rye, it links together the works of Borrow that really matter—these two and The Bible in Spain." Hugh Walker, in Cambridge History of English Literature.

Gracious, helpful and beloved, the author of the "inimitable prose idyll," Cranford, passed a serene and useful life, which is reflected in much of her writing. In Mary Barton, and in North and South, inspired by the labor agitations of the period and notable contributions to the humanitarian movement, and in Ruth, which deals with ethical questions, are found some of her most serious efforts; but Cranford, called by Lord Houghton "the purest piece of humoristic description that has been added to British literature since Charles Lamb," is her most original work.

CHARLES KINGSLEY (1819-1875)

In his early novels, Alton Locke and Yeast, Kingsley had showed his great zeal for social reform; and Hyppatia, written with far greater literary power, was also intended to convey a lesson for the day in which it was produced. "It still remains," writes Professor Cross, "the sublimest subject that historical fiction has appropriated to its use, the death struggle between Greek and Christian civilization in the fifth century."

In Westward Ho!, breathing the spirit of the Elizabethan age, Kingsley gave to the romance of the sea an historical setting.

CHARLES READE (1814-1884)

Realist that he certainly was, with his laborious arrangement in huge scrap-books of facts and incidents of every-day life which might be worked into his books; historical novelist, in that his best title to fame rests on a mediæval romance called by Sir Walter Besant the greatest historical novel in the English language; dramatist in the striving for theatrical effect which often disfigured his work; it is nevertheless as the humanitarian that

FROM WAVERLEY TO 1870

Charles Reade makes his most lasting impression. His passion for reform and his zeal in dealing with social questions, old and new, may be felt in the greater part of his writing; his most notable attacks being on prison abuses, in It is Never Too Late to Mend, and on the mismanagement of insane asylums, in Hard Cash. It is an interesting fact, however, that his greatest novel, The Cloister and the Hearth, is the "one which is, all things considered, the least a novel of purpose."

ANTHONY TROLLOPE (1815-1882)

In his entertaining autobiography, Anthony Trollope has left an account of the diligent method of work which enabled him to turn out in thirty-five years between thirty and forty novels, many of them in several volumes, besides a large number of short tales. From the mediocrity of much of this output, the series of thirteen volumes comprising The Chronicles of Barsetshire (viz.: The Warden, Barchester Towers, Doctor Thorne, Framley Parsonage, The Small House at Allington and The Last Chronicle of Barset) stand out with startling distinctness, and reveal a new humorist and a new type of humor. Here are found

GEORGE ELIOT (MARY ANN EVANS CROSS, 1819-1880) AND THE PSYCHOLOGICAL NOVEL

"Women almost invariably leave the stamp of their sex upon their work. But George Eliot took and held a man's position in literature from the outset of her career. It was not that she was unfeminine. She brought to her work a woman's sympathy and a woman's attention to detail. But in breadth of conception, in comprehensiveness of thought, her mind was essentially masculine. Her appreciation of varieties and shades of character was almost Shakespearean. . . . In the study of the inward workings of the human mind George Eliot is unsurpassed by any novelist." Bayard Tuckerman.

GEORGE MEREDITH (1828-1909)

“ ‘When at the conclusion of your article on my works you say that a certain change in public taste, should it come about, will be to some extent due to me, you hand me the flowering wreath I covet, for I think that all right use of life and the one secret of life is to pave ways for the firmer footing of those who succeed us; and as to my works, I know them faulty, think them of worth only when they point and aid to that end. Close knowledge of our fellows, discernment of the laws of existence, these lead to great civilization. I have supposed that the novel exposing and illustrating the history of man may help us to such sustaining roadside gifts.’ These words, from a private letter of George Meredith’s to the author of an article in the Harvard Monthly, contain the

LEWIS CARROLL (CHARLES LUTWIDGE DODGSON, 1832-1898)

"In 1865 appeared Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, the work by which, with its pendant, Through the Looking Glass and what Alice found there (1871), his name is best known and will be known. Therein the author's gift of absurd comic invention and delicate fanciful fun is at its richest; while the circumstance that the books originated in the wish to amuse one of his little girl-friends animated them with a charm and humanity that are not to be found in the same degree in anything else he wrote. . . . The success of both books was greatly fortified by the drawings of Mr. (afterwards Sir) John Tenniel. Alice in Wonderland has been translated into French, German, Italian, and Dutch; quotations from it and from its companion volume have passed into the language, and their dramatis personæ constitute a new nursery mythology. The author accomplished what was practically a new thing in writing—a persuasive yet rollicking madness that by its drollery fascinated children, and by its cleverness their elders.” Edward Verrall Lucas, in Dictionary of National Biography.

WILLIAM WILKIE COLLINS (1824-1889) AND THE ROMANCE OF CRIME

Between 1850 and his death in 1889, Wilkie Collins, the contemporary of Émile Gaboriau in France, produced some twenty-five novels dealing with crime and its mysteries. The best are The Woman in White and The Moonstone, called by Bayard Tuckerman the "most absorbing narratives in the whole range of fiction."

For this novel is not only one of the best loved books in English fiction and stands magnificently the severe test of rereading, it is bound to have even more admirers in the future than it has ever yet enjoyed; it is visibly growing in reputation every year." Phelps.

SOME AMERICAN FICTION BEFORE 1870

JEREMY BELKNAP (1744-1798)

Jeremy Belknap was a clergyman of Boston, who from his fifteenth year kept notes of his reading and a diary in a series of interleaved almanacs. In 1792 he published The Foresters, a humorous allegory, in which the author attempted to set forth the occurrences of American history prior to 1790.

The book first appeared in London in 1790, the first American edition being published by Carey in Philadelphia in 1794.

CHARLES BROCKDEN BROWN (1771-1810)

Charles Brockden Brown, "Father of American fiction," was born in Philadelphia in 1771. He belonged to the Radcliffe school of Gothic romance, of which his first work, Wieland, is a good example. In Edgar Huntley we find him following William Godwin in the development of the detective story. It also introduces American frontier life and forms a link between the romances of Mrs. Radcliffe and the Indian tales of Cooper. Of his other novels, Arthur Mervyn is perhaps the best known.

"The lineal descendants of the Gothic romance," writes Professor Cross, "are the tales of terror and wonder by Irving, Poe and Hawthorne." Irving produced two typically American pieces in Rip Van Winkle and The Legend of Sleepy Hollow, and to the three Americans is due to a large extent the remarkable development of the short story during the nineteenth century.

"The three pieces [Rip Van Winkle, The Spectre Bridegroom and The Legend of Sleepy Hollow] . . . are among the best short stories in the language, and as they are also among the first in time, Irving deserves the credit of being a pioneer in a most delightful form of modern fiction. The Sketch-Book also won him a place in British literature, since in Christmas Eve and in Little Britain he gave hints to Charles Dickens. In fact, he is a link between Addison and Goldsmith and the great author of The Pickwick Papers." W. P. Trent.

NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE (1804-1864)

In the stories of America's greatest writer of fiction, especially in The Scarlet Letter, The House of the Seven Gables, and The Marble Faun, is found the highest form of the Gothic romance, refined and spiritualized by the author's lofty purposes.

Mr. Henry James, who has characterized The Scarlet Letter as "the most distinguished piece of prose fiction that has sprung from American soil," writes of Hawthorne: "He was a beauti-

WILLIAM GILMORE SIMMS (1806-1870)

"William Gilmore Simms, of Charleston, was, with the exception of Poe, the most important Southern writer before the Civil War and also the most prolific and able of the followers of Cooper. . . . He began his literary career as a poet and never ceased to write verse, but obtained real success only in fiction. He struck his vein in 1834 with Guy Rivers, a tale of adventures in the Georgia gold-fields, which was the first of a series of romances dealing with life in the far Southern and Southwestern States. Better than any of these was Yemassee (1835), a story of South Carolina and the Southern Indians almost worthy of Cooper. The same year, with The

JAMES D. McCABE, JR. (1842-1883)

The preface of McCabe's Aid-de-camp, published in Richmond during the Civil War, says that the romance was written in 1862, "more for the purpose of beguiling a season of weariness than with the expectation of presenting it to the public. It

FRANCIS BRET HARTE (1839-1902)

"It is somewhat odd that Bret Harte should not have written a great novel of character. . . . The panorama of incidents in which he set his gallery of portraits gives him the effect of a novelist; he has in the mass of his western stories a volume and unity of effect such as neither Poe nor Hawthorne attained in short stories. If his genius had taken such a direction, the material he had in hand deserved the larger form, not of the novel, but the epic." Erskine.

- 160 CONDENSED NOVELS, AND OTHER PAPERS. BY F. BRET HARTE. WITH COMIC ILLUSTRATIONS BY FRANK BELLEW. NEW YORK: G. W. CARLETON & COMPANY . . . MDCCCLXVII. First edition. Duodecimo. Full-page woodcuts. Original cloth.

Harte's first published writings were these burlesques of famous novels, which he contributed to The Golden Era and The Californian.

- 161 THE LUCK OF ROARING CAMP, AND OTHER SKETCHES. BY FRANCIS BRET HARTE. BOSTON: FIELDS, OSGOOD, & CO. 1870. First edition. Duodecimo.

The Luck of Roaring Camp first appeared in the second number of The Overland Monthly.

We are indebted to the authorities of the New York Public Library for the following statistics of the circulation of certain books in their branch libraries in Manhattan during the year 1916. It must be remembered that the circulation is somewhat affected by the requirements for school reading. Dramatization and moving picture performances have also increased the demand for certain novels.

Dr. Edwin H. Anderson, Director of the New York Public Library, writes in connection with this list:

"The public does not, I think, appreciate the fact that these standard novels have a greater circulation through the public libraries of this country than the recent so-called best sellers."
